| 20 | I'm concerned about the loophole that the city decides what issues to seek public engagement on, and if a decision has already been made they won't pursue public engagement. Seems like that enables the city to do what they like anyway. | 6/22/2018 9:20 AM |

| 26 | There is still a lot of escape words in this policy such as in the appropriate section. The city will CHOOSE ...giving to much flexibility about when they deem it to be appropriate. Also it should be better laid out in detail as to when the public will be consulted and when the cityust seek consultation. | 6/19/2018 10:35 PM |

| 30 | I like the concept. But where decisions Council are required to make have an impact on the financial security of residents are required, there should be a public meeting, where staff are available to answer questions, and at least one month notice should be provided. In the case of the budget, Webster, and CUI, several opportunities for public input. | 6/19/2018 6:43 PM |

| 35 | There must be budget implications for public engagement, it would be nice to know the fiscal limitations. Also, it is not clear as to when the engagement would be determined and at what level. It should be part of each project at the outset and clearly defined if and what public engagement is to be warranted. | 6/18/2018 8:41 PM |
| 36 | The requirements for public feedback are not necessarily specific enough. We need to avoid a situation where council rejects good business opportunities that residents would want a say in. For example, the rejection of the shopping complex proposed for Chestermere that is now East Hills. | 6/18/2018 7:03 PM |

| 2 | It seems the people most affected by policy have never been consulted. Judging by the new taxes levied on what is now called 'vacant residential land' the new council would appear to be ready to carry on this Chestermere tradition. | 6/29/2018 10:35 PM |

| 7 | We have missed positive growth opportunities in the past for unknown reasons. Greater involvement of the community could have provided a pro growth mindset rather than our current anemic economy. Engagement should be simple.
